Executive Summary

The Atlantic Region Association of Immigrant Serving Agencies (ARAISA) engaged Goss Gilroy Inc. (GGI) to conduct a mapping and gap analysis regarding information and other services provided to migrant workers, especially temporary foreign workers (TFWs) in Nova Scotia (NS), New Brunswick (NB), and Prince Edward Island (PEI).

Context

Temporary Foreign Worker & International Mobility Programs

There are two main programs through which migrant workers enter Canada: the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) and the International Mobility Program (IMP). The TFWP has streams for caregivers, agricultural workers, and other temporary foreign workers that are divided by wage categories. The overall goal of the TFWP is to "fill short-term labor shortages". The IMP includes a variety of different components such as the International Experience Canada component, which includes working holiday, young professional, and international internship visa options. The program "aims to promote Canada's broad economic and cultural interests".

While the TFWP requires employers to obtain a labor market impact assessment (LMIA) (i.e., they must demonstrate that they could not fill the position with local labor), the IMP does not require employers to obtain this assessment. For the TFWP, temporary foreign workers (TFWs) generally receive a closed work permit that only allows them to work for one specific employer; whereas, for IMP, TFWs generally (but not exclusively) receive an open work permit and thus have more flexibility in where they work and for which employer.

The TFWP's Agricultural Stream

The agricultural stream of the TFWP allows employers whose production is related to specific commodity sectors and on-farm primary agriculture activities to hire TFWs to address labour shortages that cannot be filled with Canadians or permanent residents. This stream allows employers to hire TFWs for up to two years for low-wage positions and up to three years for high-wage positions.

Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program (SAWP)

Another option to hire TFWs in the agricultural sector is through the Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program (SAWP). The SAWP is targeted to employers working in the agricultural sector and allows them hire TFWs to address labour shortages that cannot be filled by Canadians or Permanent Residents (PRs). The SAWP is built on bilateral agreements between Canada and participating countries. This means that Canadian employers using the SAWP can only hire TFWs originating from these countries. Moreover, the employers' production needs to be related to specific commodity sectors and the work performed by TFWs under this stream must be related to on farm primary agriculture. As the title of the SAWP indicates, employment of TFWs under this stream is seasonal or temporary, i.e., TFWs can be hired for a maximum of 8 months, between January 1 and December 15" each year.

The High-Wage and Low-Wage Streams of the TFWP

In addition to the SAWP, the Temporary Foreign Worker Program also has streams for high-wage and low-wage positions. The high-wage stream is for positions that offer a wage “at or above the provincial or territorial median hourly wage”, whereas the low-wage stream is for positions that offer a wage “below the provincial or territorial median hourly wage”¹. While the process for employers to hire a migrant worker is similar in both streams (e.g., as with the SAWP, they have to apply for an LMIA), the length for which work permits can be granted as well as the specific program requirements vary slightly.

The Role of LMIAs

As noted previously, employers who want to hire a migrant worker through the TFWP have to apply for an LMIA. LMIA applications are processed by Service Canada (of the Department of Employment and Social Development Canada (ESDC)) and the whole LMIA process is intended to ensure that positions offered to a migrant worker cannot currently be filled by Canadians or permanent residents. The LMIA process is not only there to assess the impact that hiring a TFW has on the Canadian labour market but also to ensure that employers who are hiring TFWs are meeting all program requirements.

The Roles of the Federal and Provincial Governments in the TFWP and IMP

ESDC oversees the TFWP including the SAWP. As such, they are responsible for determining the rules and conditions of the program, ensuring that employers comply with this regulatory framework and processing LMIA applications. As a component of this latter duty, ESDC provides different platforms to report abuse and assesses and investigates these reports. Moreover, ESDC has authority to inspect employers under certain conditions to verify employers’ compliance with program requirements.

Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) is responsible for processing work permit applications and determining whether workers are eligible to come and work in Canada. While the TFWP is overseen by ESDC, IRCC is responsible for overseeing the IMP. Thus, IRCC is responsible for determining the rules and conditions of the IMP and ensuring that employers comply. Therefore, similarly to ESDC, IRCC has the authority to inspect employers under certain conditions to verify employers’ compliance with program requirements. TFWs employed under the IMP who are experiencing abuse can use the same means as TFWs in the TFWP to report abuse, and IRCC assesses and investigates these reports.

Provincial governments typically determine labour and employment standards which also apply to migrant workers.² These standards, for example, include hours of work, working conditions and termination of employment.

If employees, including migrant workers, face workplace health and safety concerns, they would therefore report these concerns to their respective provincial or territorial workplace health and safety offices, which are affiliated with departments at the respective provincial or territorial governments. Likewise, other employment issues such as unjust pay, unfair treatment or not respecting the employment agreement are to be reported at the provincial/territorial level to the provincial or territorial employment standards office.

How Many Migrant Workers are there in the Maritimes?

There are a few sources of data which can help to identify the number of TFWs in the Maritimes. ESDC publishes details on the number of positive LMIAs it has issued; however not all of those decisions will necessarily result in a worker coming to the Maritimes. Therefore, data published by IRCC, which indicates the number of work permits issued, offers a more accurate representation of overall numbers of TFWs.

In NS, the annual number of TFWP work permit holders has increased every year since 2015 (except for 2020). This has largely been driven by increases in TFWs in farming occupations. In NB, there has been a steep increase since 2020, due largely to TFWs in seafood processing. In PEI, annual TFW work permits have also been increasing, with both seafood processing and farming playing a role. NS has typically had the largest number of TFWs among the Maritime provinces, but in 2022 (based on data up to September), NB surpassed NS in this regard.

In the past 12 months for which data is available, in NB and PEI, there were more Low Wage stream approved LMIAs, while in NS, there were more Primary Agriculture stream LMIAs.

In 2021, the largest numbers of TFWs in agriculture in the Maritimes were from Jamaica, followed by Mexico.

Geographic Mapping

The data from ESDC on the number of positive LMIAs it has issued in the four most recent quarters (July 2021- June 2022) has been used to create an interactive map showing the locations of these positive LMIAs across the Maritime provinces. The interactive version of this map can be accessed at:

² Note: There are some occupations that are federally regulated and these occupations therefore have to adhere to the rules set out in the Federal Labour Standards.

Detail regarding the datasets which are available on TFWs in the Maritime provinces, where they can be accessed and what information they contain, is included in the body of the report.

Service Mapping

Overall, the research identified that most services for migrant workers are provided by community organizations and advocacy groups as well as Service Providing Organizations (SPOs). While many SPOs do have services available to migrant workers, some indicated that they do not undertake any specific outreach activities to these populations, i.e., they would not turn migrant workers away if they come to seek their services but also did not undertake any specific efforts to reach them as they did not have the capacities and resources to do so. Others mentioned that while their services are open to all migrants (including PRs and TFWs), they “may limit the timeframe they spend with migrant workers compared to PRs”. Moreover, having to navigate requirements such as hitting targets and/or key performance indicators linked to federal and provincial funding meant that it could sometimes be challenging for SPOs, who often receive most of their funding from IRCC, to focus their work on serving migrant workers. Finally, several SPOs mentioned that they are not able to provide migrant workers with support when they face immigration or workplace challenges. As such, this work is currently and exclusively undertaken by very few community and advocacy groups in the Maritime provinces.

Funding Sources

While IRCC is the main funding source for SPOs in Canada, the funding provided by IRCC is predominantly restricted to providing services to newcomers to Canada who arrive as PRs. IRCC funding can also be used to serve Government Assisted Refugees (GARs), immigrants entering through special programs that put them on the pathway to PR such as the Atlantic Immigration Program (AIP)³, as well as Ukrainian nationals who are currently arriving in Canada. Thus, IRCC funding does not enable most SPOs to provide services to the vast majority of migrant workers.

Funding from provincial governments often allows SPOs and other community organizations, particularly in NB and PEI, to provide services to migrant workers. NS seems to be an exception as the current settlement funding guidelines 2023-26 do not include migrant workers other than those who currently hold a work permit but are PR applicants or those who have entered NS through the AIP as eligible clients for receiving settlement services.

According to discussions held as part of this research, it was also found that some SPOs and community organizations receive funding through their municipal governments, e.g., the city in which they are located. Additionally, several organizations, and especially grassroots community organizations, highlighted that they are able to deliver services to migrant workers with funds provided to them through foundations, donations and/or other fundraising efforts.

³ The Atlantic Immigration Program is a pathway to permanent residence for skilled foreign workers and international graduates from a Canadian institution who want to work and live in 1 of Canada’s 4 Atlantic provinces.

Migrant Workers' Awareness of Their Rights and Responsibilities

Opinions regarding whether migrant workers are aware of their rights and responsibilities varied among different stakeholders consulted for this research project. Some clearly identified that most migrant workers are not aware of their rights and more efforts needed to be undertaken to educate them on their rights. Others indicated that often migrant workers are aware of their rights or at least know where to find information on their rights. However, these stakeholders underlined that while migrant workers often know about their rights, they are not able to enforce their rights, and there were not enough tools and supports for them to do so. Some participants also mentioned that while they thought migrant workers are generally aware of their rights, there is a lack of knowledge of migrant workers' rights among employers.

Regarding the question whether the awareness of migrant workers with regards to their rights is measured, the research clearly indicated that this was not the case.

Challenges and Gaps in Services to TFWs

Challenges

Through the consultations held as part of this research, participants identified several existing challenges when providing information and services to migrant workers in Atlantic Canada. These include the following:

- Lack of knowledge among SPO staff: because the work of SPOs often focuses on PRs,, SPO staff sometimes lack knowledge and/or awareness around the services that are available to TFWs.
- Need for networking and community planning: While there currently exist some connections and networks between different migrant serving organizations in the Maritimes, these could be strengthened. Existing networks should be drawn upon and expanded to ensure that migrant workers receive the most responsive services.
- Lack of funding available to provide services: One of the biggest challenges in providing information and services to migrant workers was the lack of available funding that allows SPOs to provide services to migrant workers.
- Capacity limits: Providing migrant workers with information and services can be challenging due to capacity limits, e.g., related to the number of employees available to provide services and information. Lack of capacity to provide outreach activities presents a major challenge in reaching and supporting migrant workers.
- Business hours of SPOs: The opening hours of many SPOs do not correspond to the times in which migrant workers are free to seek out such services
- Communication and language: SPOs predominantly use email, phone or in-person communication, while it was identified that migrant workers typically seem to rely on

WhatsApp as their main form of communicating with each other and with the outside world. Additionally, language barriers also presented a challenge for some in providing services to migrant workers, especially to those who either do not speak or have limited English and/or French.

- Geographical location of workers: Often migrant workers, especially those working in seafood plants or agriculture, are located in more rural areas, where fewer services can be found. Migrant workers in these areas often have to rely on their employers for transportation and don't have access to public transportation.

Gaps

Additional gaps in services identified include the following:

- Lack of access to childcare support
- Not being able to access governmental benefit programs (e.g., daycare subsidies, income assistance), and/or difficulty applying for these benefits
- Limited access to language classes
- Limited access to legal services and aid
- Need for support for navigating immigration pathways
- Lack of access to open work permits and permanent residency
- Need for means and support to enforce their rights
- Limited access to health care
- Need for access to emergency housing and food
- Need for continuity of services
- Housing standards not always met
- Need for engagement with the employers of TFWs

Promising Practices and Opportunities

Some of the promising practices and opportunities identified include the following:

- Meet migrant workers where they are, on their 'turf', and in their terms
- Outreach, continuity of services and relationship building with migrant workers
- Outreach to community, creating community connections and relationships

- Guides to help migrant workers navigate important information
- Increasing knowledge exchange and sharing best practices among SPOs and other migrant serving organizations
- Collaboration between all levels of stakeholders
- Consulting migrant workers

Conclusion and Recommendations

Overall, while the numbers of migrant workers have consistently increased in all three Maritime provinces over the past few years, there are limited services and supports available to them. This is particularly true for those migrant workers who are the most vulnerable, namely those entering the Maritimes through the low-wage stream and the SAWP.

Based on the results of the mapping and gap analysis, the following are some recommendations on how to improve information and services to migrant workers:

1. Language and Communication

- Deliver services and provide information in more languages, including the native languages of the largest groups of migrant workers arriving in the Maritimes.
- When information can only be provided in English or French, make sure it is accessible in plain and comprehensive language.
- Use communication technology that is used by migrant workers, e.g., WhatsApp.
- Ensure that services and supports are accessible to migrant workers at times when they can access them, e.g., evenings and weekends after their regular work day.

2. Outreach, Continuity and Meeting Migrants Where they Are, on their Turf and in Their Terms

- Engage in outreach activities to ensure migrant workers, irrespective of their locations, know about their rights and services available to them.
- Ensure there is continuity in engagement with and services provided to migrant workers.
- Engage migrants and provide information and services at times and in locations that are convenient to them, e.g., integrate them in activities that migrant workers already participate in or enjoy doing.

3. Increase Networking and Collaboration

- Draw on existing networks and experiences of organizations that already provide services and support to migrant workers.

- b) Enable networking and sharing of best practices among SPOs and other migrant serving organizations, e.g., through creating a community of practice.
- c) Increase collaboration between different types of stakeholders (e.g., SPOs, community organizations, municipal and provincial government and IRCC).

4. Help Migrant Workers Enforce their Rights

- a) Establish more services that help migrant workers to navigate bureaucratic and administrative processes including, but not limited to, processes of applying for government funding and benefits, and filing taxes etc.
- b) Establish more services that help migrant workers enforce their rights, including but not limited to, helping them to file complaints about violations of their rights, applying for open work permit for vulnerable foreign workers.
- c) Establish more services that provide emergency housing and support for migrant workers escaping abusive employment and housing conditions.

Introduction

Introduction

The Atlantic Region Association of Immigrant Serving Agencies (ARAISA) engaged Goss Gilroy Inc. (GGI) to conduct a mapping and gap analysis regarding information and other services provided to migrant workers, especially temporary foreign workers (TFWs) in Nova Scotia (NS), New Brunswick (NB), and Prince Edward Island (PEI).

The intent of the mapping and gap analysis is to inform the Migrant Workers Support Project, which focuses on ensuring migrant workers are aware of their rights and the services available to them while working in Canada. Under this project, migrant workers are defined as “foreign nationals who have been or had been issued a work permit under the Temporary Foreign Worker Program, or have or had been issued an employer-specific work permit under the International Mobility Program”.

Project activities will include workshops on a variety of topics, as well as community events to better integrate migrant workers in the communities where they live and work in the Maritimes. ARAISA plans to enter into sub-agreements with community-based organizations that will in turn provide direct services to migrant workers. Funding for these sub-projects will be determined by an open call for proposals and a selection process.

This report is accompanied by two Excel files:

- “ESDC LMIA’s compiled 2018-2022 Q2”
 - This file contains the data on positive Labour Market Impact Assessments issued from 2018-June 2022 for the Maritime provinces. These are originally published by ESDC in separate files each quarter; and so this Excel document compiles all of the data from many separate files together, so the information can be more easily searched and used.
- “For mapping – LMIA’s”
 - This Excel file was used to create the Google Map showing positive LMIA’s from July 2021-June 2022, as presented in this report. It is provided so that it can be used if ARAISA desires to create its own map using Google MyMaps.

Methodology

This project was undertaken using the following methods:

- A research and data review
- Participation in a two-day meeting of stakeholders

- A short online survey for stakeholders (18 responses received)
- Interviews with 11 stakeholders
- One focus group with migrant workers

Limitations

Due to time constraints and the challenges of arranging interviews with individuals often involved in shift work, there was only one focus group held with migrant workers, which was carried out by a consultant to ARAISA.

Context

A list of research questions was developed to guide this study, and is included in Appendix C. The research questions which will be discussed in each section are also presented in the format of Question 1 (below):

Temporary Foreign Worker & International Mobility Programs

There are two main programs through which migrant workers enter Canada: the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP) and the International Mobility Program (IMP)⁴. The TFWP has streams for caregivers, agricultural workers, and other temporary foreign workers that are divided by wage categories. The overall goal of the TFWP is to "fill short-term labor shortages"⁵. The IMP includes a variety of different components such as the International Experience Canada component which includes working holiday, young professional, and international internship visa options. The program "aims to promote Canada's broad economic and cultural interests"⁶.

While the TFWP requires employers to obtain a labor market impact assessment (LMIA) (i.e., they must demonstrate that they could not fill the position with local labor), the IMP does not require employers to obtain an LMIA⁷. For the TFWP, temporary foreign workers (TFWs) generally receive a closed work permit that only allows them to work for one specific employer, whereas; in the second case, TFWs generally (but not exclusively) receive an open work permit and thus have more flexibility in where they work and for which employer⁸.

Over the past two years, the IMP program has become the most common route for TFWs to enter Canada. Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) data shows that in 2019, 306,960 work permits were granted under the IMP while only 98,335 work permits were granted under the TFWP (Coderre & Nakache, 2021).

Overall, since the 1990s, the number of TFWs has grown rapidly and since the early 2000s, the number of TFWs entering Canada has exceeded the number of people granted permanent residents⁹.

Table 1, below, summarizes some of the differences in characteristics of the various TFW streams. These streams and their requirements are also presented in more detail in the sections which follow.

The TFWP's Agricultural Stream

The agricultural stream of the TFWP allows employers whose production is related to specific commodity sectors and related to on-farm primary agriculture activities to hire TFWs to address labour shortages that can't be filled with Canadians or permanent residents. This stream allows employers to hire TFWs for up to two years for low-wage positions and up to three years for high-wage positions¹⁰.

Agricultural Stream Program Requirements

An overview of the program requirements for the agricultural stream is listed below¹¹:

- Processing fee: No LIMA processing fee is required for positions related to primary agriculture;
- Recruitment fees: Employers are not allowed to “charge or recover any recruitment fees, directly or indirectly,” from the TFWs;
- Transportation: Employers are responsible for arranging and paying the “round-trip transportation” of TFWs (i.e., from their home country to Canada and back) up-front. None of these costs can be recovered from the TFW;
- Day-to-day transportation: Where required, employers must provide free transportation between TFWs' accommodations and the workplace;
- Housing: “Employers must provide TFWs with adequate, suitable and affordable housing as defined by the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation”. Housing can be on-farm or off-site but must always comply with maximum occupancy regulations. Employers are allowed to deduct some money from TFWs wages for housing, however, certain regulations apply;
- Housing inspection: Accommodations provided by employers need to be inspected by the “appropriate provincial, territorial or municipal authority” prior to applying for the labour market impact assessment (LMIA);
- Health insurance: In applicable provinces and territories, Employers must provide TFWs with “private health insurance that covers emergency medical care” until TFWs are eligible to receive provincial health insurance. Costs for private health insurance may not be “charged back to the worker”;
- Workplace safety: Employers must provide workplace safety insurance to TFWs that is either covered by “the provincial/territorial insurance provider, where required by law,” or a private plan that is equivalent or better than the coverage of the provincial/territorial insurance plan;

- Pesticides and chemical use: Employers must inform TFWs of the use of pesticides or other hazardous chemicals and provide “free protective equipment”, “appropriate formal and informal training” as well as “supervision where required by law”;
- Employment agreement: An employment agreement, drafted in English or French, must be signed by both the employer and the employee “on or before their first day of work” and a copy must be provided to the migrant worker. The agreement needs to “include information for employment in the same occupation, with the same wages and working conditions as those set out in the offer of employment”;
- Union consultation: For unionized positions filled by TFWs it is recommended that employers consult with unions;
- Business legitimacy: Employers must “demonstrate that their business and job offer are legitimate”;
- Third-party representatives: Employers are allowed to use third-parties (paid or unpaid) to help them with the application and/or recruitment process, however, specific conditions apply; and,
- New employers: New employers (i.e., those “who have not employed a temporary foreign worker in the past 6 years prior to submitting a LMIA application”) have to undergo a review process before their applications are processed¹².

Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program (SAWP)

Another way to hire TFWs in the agricultural sector is through the Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program (SAWP). The SAWP is targeted to employers working in the agricultural sector and allows them hire TFWs to address labour shortages that cannot be filled by Canadians or PRs ¹³. The SAWP is built on bilateral agreements between Canada and participating countries, currently including, Mexico and Caribbean countries including Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, Montserrat, St. Kitts-Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines and Trinidad and Tobago ¹⁴. This means that Canadian employers using the SAWP can only hire TFWs originating from these countries. Moreover, the employers’ production needs to be related to specific commodity sectors as listed on Employment and Social Development Canada’s (ESDC) website and the work performed by TFWs under this stream “must be related to on farm primary agriculture”¹⁵. As the title of the SAWP indicates, employment of TFWs under this stream is seasonal or temporary, i.e., TFWs can be hired “for a maximum of 8 months, between January 1 and December 15” each year¹⁶¹⁷.

SAWP Program Requirements

The SAWP has a number of program requirements. An overview of these requirements is listed below¹⁸:

- Recruitment fees: Employers are not allowed to “charge or recover any recruitment fees, directly or indirectly,” from the TFWs;
- Transportation: Employers are responsible for arranging and paying the “round-trip transportation” of TFWs (i.e., from their home country to Canada and back), however, they can “recover some of these costs through payroll deductions”¹⁹;
- Day-to-day transportation: Employers must provide free transportation between TFWs’ accommodations and the workplace;
- Housing: “Employers must provide TFWs with adequate, suitable and affordable housing as defined by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation”;
- Housing inspection: Accommodations provided by employers need to be inspected by the “appropriate provincial, territorial or municipal authority” prior to applying for the labour market impact assessment (LMIA);
- Health insurance: Employers must provide TFWs with “private health insurance that covers emergency medical care” until TFWs are eligible to receive provincial health insurance;
- Workplace safety insurance: Employers must provide workplace safety insurance to TFWs that is either covered by “the provincial/territorial insurance provider, where required by law,” or a private plan that is equivalent or better than the coverage of the provincial/territorial insurance plan”;
- Pesticides and chemical use: Employers must inform TFWs of the use of pesticides or other hazardous chemicals and provide “free protective equipment”, “appropriate formal and informal training” as well as “supervision where required by law”;
- SAWP contract: A “standard, non-modifiable contract” needs to be signed by the employer and the employee on the TFWs first day of work. The contract also needs to be signed by the “liaison officer for the foreign government [...] identified on the LMIA application”. Employers must provide a copy of the contract “in English or French and Spanish” to the TFWs they are hiring;

¹⁵ Employment and Social Development Canada.

¹⁷ Note: For the 2022 season, the maximum stay of TFWs under the SAWP has been extended to 9 months to accommodate the required quarantine period.

¹⁸ For a detailed list with explanations see: <https://www.canada.ca/en/employment-social-development/services/foreign-workers/agricultural/seasonal-agricultural/requirements.html>

¹⁹ Payroll deductions for TFWs’ round-trip transportation is not possible in British Columbia.

- Employment agreement: Since September 26, 2022, employers also need to provide an employment agreement to TFWs in addition to the employment contract. The employment agreement needs to be signed by the TFW and the employer “on or before the first day of work” and has to be provided in either English or French and, if possible in the “native language” of the worker. Employers need to ensure to provide a copy of the employment agreement to the TFWs;
- Union consultation: For unionized positions filled by TFWs it is recommended that employers consult with unions;
- Transfer of seasonal agricultural workers: There are certain circumstances under which employers “can transfer a worker from one farm to another (i.e., they need to have “the worker’s consent, prior written approval from the foreign government representative in Canada [as well as] prior written approval from ESDC/Service Canada”);
- Business legitimacy: Employers must “demonstrate that their business and job offer are legitimate”;
- Work permit fees: Are to be paid directly to IRCC by the TFWs;
- Third-party representatives: Employers are allowed to use third-parties (paid or unpaid) to help them with the application and/or recruitment process, however, specific conditions apply;
- New employers: New employers (i.e., those “who have not employed a temporary foreign worker in the past 6 years prior to submitting a LMIA application”) have to undergo a review process before their applications are processed ²⁰.

The High-Wage and Low-Wage Streams of the TFWP

In addition to the SAWP, the Temporary Foreign Worker Program also has streams for high-wage and low-wage positions. The high-wage stream is for positions that offer a wage that is “at or above the provincial or territorial median hourly wage” whereas the low-wage stream is for positions that offer a wage that is “below the provincial or territorial median hourly wage”

²¹. While the process that employers have to go through in order to hire a migrant worker is similar in both streams (e.g., as with the SAWP, they have to apply for an LMIA) the length for which work permits can be granted as well as the specific program requirements vary slightly and are therefore presented in more detail below.

²⁰ Employment and Social Development Canada, “Hire a Temporary Worker through the Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program - Overview.”

²¹ Employment and Social Development Canada, “Hire a Temporary Foreign Worker in a High-Wage or Low-Wage Position.”

Program Requirements for the TFWP's High-Wage Stream

The high-wage stream allows employers to hire TFWs for up to 3 years. Moreover, this stream of the TFWP has certain program requirements as briefly described below²²:

- Processing fee: An LMIA processing fee of $1,000 for each position has to be paid by the employer and “cannot be paid by nor be recovered from the temporary foreign workers”²³;
- Recruitment fees: Recruitment fees cannot be charged or recovered “directly or indirectly, from the temporary foreign workers”;
- Third-party representatives: Employers are allowed to use third-parties (paid or unpaid) to help them with the application and/or recruitment process, however, certain conditions apply and costs cannot be charged or recovered from temporary foreign workers;
- New employers: New employers (i.e., those “who have not employed a temporary foreign worker in the past 6 years prior to submitting a LMIA application”) have to undergo a review process before their applications are processed;
- Business legitimacy: Employers must provide proof of the legitimacy of their business and the job offer;
- Transition plan: Employers have to develop and submit a transition plan that is valid for the period a TFW is hired and that “describes the activities [employers] are agreeing to undertake to recruit, retain and train Canadians and permanent residents and to reduce [their] reliance on the Temporary Foreign Worker Program”²⁴;
- Recruitment and advertisement: To be able to hire a TFW, employers must undertake recruitment and advertisement efforts to hire a Canadian or permanent resident first and submit proof of these efforts with their LMIA application;
- Wages: Employers must provide migrant workers with wages that are similar “to Canadian and permanent resident employees hired for the same job and work location, and with similar skills and years of experience”;
- Job duties and working conditions: TFWs are only allowed to “perform duties that correspond to the occupation they were hired for. Moreover, employers must “pay TFWs for all work (including overtime, where required by law), provide workplace safety insurance, offer TFWs the same benefits as other workers, and not take the TFW’s identification”;
- Health insurance: In applicable provinces, employers must provide TFWs with “private health insurance that covers emergency medical care” until TFWs are eligible to receive provincial health insurance;
- Workplace safety insurance: Employers must provide workplace safety insurance to TFWs that is either covered by “the provincial/territorial insurance provider, where required by law,” or a private plan that is equivalent or better than the coverage of the provincial/territorial insurance plan”;

- Employment agreement: An employment agreement, drafted in English or French, must be signed by both the employer and the employee “on or before their first day of work” and a copy must be provided to the migrant worker. The agreement needs to “include information for employment in the same occupation, with the same wages and working conditions as those set out in the offer of employment”;
- Language of work: Employers can indicate whether the job requires English and/or French skills. Justifications for any other language required need to be provided. Special requirements apply when a position comes without language requirements; and,
- Unionized positions: TFWs hired for unionized positions need to be offered and receive “the same wage rates as those established under the collective agreement” and “the same terms and conditions as Canadian and permanent resident workers”. Additionally, employers need to “submit a copy of the section of the collective bargaining agreement on the wage structure”²⁵.

Program Requirements for the TFWP’s Low-Wage Stream

The low-wage stream allows employers to hire TFWs for a maximum of two years and comes with a number of program requirements. Because many of these requirements are identical to those that are applicable to the high-wage stream of the TFWP, below only those requirements that differ from the high-wage stream are described in more detail while the others are linked to the descriptions in the section on the program requirements in the high-wage stream²⁶:

- Processing fee;
- Recruitment fee;
- Third-party representatives;
- New employers;
- Business legitimacy;
- Cap on proportion of low-wage positions: Since April 30th, 2022 employers are only allowed to hire up to 20% of the TFWs they hire through the low-wage stream at any of their specific work locations. The limit is up to 30% for employers hiring workers in the construction, food manufacturing, wood product manufacturing, furniture and related product manufacturing, hospital, nursing and residential care facilities, and accommodation and food services sectors. Certain exemptions to this cap apply, e.g., for “low-wage positions in seasonal industries that do not go beyond 270 calendar-days” or “on-farm primary agricultural positions”;

The TFWP’s In-Home Caregiver Program

The in-home caregiver program is intended to support families or individuals in hiring “a foreign caregiver to provide care, in a private residence, to children, seniors or persons with certified medical needs” when these positions cannot be filled by Canadians or permanent residents ²⁸. TFWs can be hired “on a live-in or live out basis” and either for a two-year period or, if hired under the high-wage stream, for up to three years ²⁹.

In-Home Caregiver Program Requirements

An overview of the program requirements of the in-home caregiver program is presented below.³⁰ As some of the requirements are identical to those in the SAWP and the high-wage stream, these requirements will be just referenced:

- Processing fee: Employers are required to pay $1,000 in processing fees for the LMIA application, however, certain exemptions apply;
- Recruitment fees;

³⁰ For a detailed description of the program requirements of the in-home caregiver program see: <https://www.canada.ca/en/employment-social-development/services/foreign-workers/caregiver/requirements.html>

- Language restrictions: English or French are the only languages that can be used as a job requirement unless it can be demonstrated “that another language is essential for the job”;
- Language proficiency: TFWs need to be fluent enough in English or French “to communicate effectively and independently in an unsupervised setting”. It is the employer’s responsibility to ensure this;
- Education, training or experience: “Employers are responsible for ensuring that TFWs being hired have all the training, qualifications and experience required to successfully and safely perform the job duties of the position for which they are hired”;
- Regulated occupations: Employers are responsible to ensure any necessary certification, registration or licensing is undertaken with the appropriate regulatory body for any TFW working in a regulated occupation that they are hiring;
- Multiple employers: Up to a maximum of two employers can “share the responsibilities of hiring an in-home caregiver. While only one application is required in this case, “both employers must meet all of the program requirements and sign all documents”;
- Canada Revenue Agency business number: Individuals hiring a caregiver “must obtain a business number (BN) from the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA);
- Record of Employment: Employers must provide TFWs with “a Record of Employment (ROE) when an interruption of earnings occurs for an employee”;
- Proof of individual requiring care: Employers must provide a proof that care recipient is in need of care;
- Proof of address: If the employer and the care recipient do not live at the same address, a proof of address of the care recipient needs to be submitted,
- Financial ability: Only employers demonstrating “their financial ability to pay the caregiver’s wages” are entitled to hire a TFW;
- Transportation: Employers hiring a low-wage in-home caregiver are responsible for paying for the transportation of the TFW to and from the work location at the start of the contract and when the contract is finished. These costs need to be paid upfront and cannot be recovered from the TFW;
- Housing: While employers “cannot require a caregiver to live in their home”, if it is mutually agreed upon that living in is the best solution, the employer needs to adhere to certain rules. Employers of TFWs hired through the low-wage stream “must ensure that suitable and affordable accommodation is available to the TFW” if they are not living in. This is not required by employers hiring a caregiver through the high-wage stream;
- Ministerial instruction – Refusal to process an application: LMIA applications “received on or after December 1, 2014” may be refused if the employer is “seeking to hire in-home caregivers exclusively on a live-in basis;

The Role of LMIAs

Employers who want to hire a migrant worker through the TFWP have to apply for an LMIA. LMIA applications are processed by Service Canada (part of the Department of ESDC) and the whole LMIA process is supposed to ensure that positions offered to a migrant worker cannot currently be filled by Canadians or permanent residents, i.e., to demonstrate “that there is a need for a foreign worker to fill” a job ³². The LMIA, however, is not only there to ensure that there is actually a need to hire a migrant worker but also a process for ESDC to verify if the employer is “eligible to participate in the Temporary Foreign Worker Program”, “verify the consistency of the job offer with federal-provincial-territorial agreements”, and “assess the genuineness of the job offer” ³³. Thus, overall, the LMIA process is not only there to assess the impact that hiring a TFW has on the Canadian labour market but also to ensure that employers who are hiring TFWs are meeting all program requirements.

Depending on the stream through which employers apply for hiring a migrant worker, they have to submit certain documents which typically include proof of business legitimacy, proof of advertisement of the position (i.e., employers need to provide proof of minimum requirements of having advertised the job to Canadians and permanent residents)³⁴, as well as the employment offer and/or contract that outlines the position, work hours, salary and other working conditions. If the program requires employers to provide housing, a housing inspection report also needs to be submitted alongside other documents. If successful, the employer receives a confirmation letter which also “provides specific details about the job offer, such as the wages, working conditions and occupations” ³⁵. As such, the positive LMIA confirmation letter also becomes an important tool by which employers have to abide regarding the working and employment conditions of the TFWs that they hire.

Once a positive LMIA letter is received, employers need to share a copy of this letter as well as a signed employment contract with the TFW they are planning to hire. The TFWs need this letter and the employment contract to be able to apply for a work permit.

The Roles of the Federal and Provincial Governments in the TFWP and IMP

ESDC oversees the Temporary Foreign Worker Program including the SAWP. As such, they are responsible for determining the rules and conditions of the program, ensuring that employers comply by them and processing LMIA applications. As part of processing LMIA applications, ESDC assesses whether employers are eligible to participate in the program and whether the job offer is genuine. ESDC also verifies “the consistency of the job offer with federal-provincial-territorial agreements” and assess the overall “impact of hiring a TFW on the [Canadian] labour market”³⁶. As part of their duties to ensure that employers comply with the rules and regulations of the program, ESDC provides different platforms to report abuse and assesses and investigates these reports. Moreover, ESDC has authority to inspect employers under certain conditions to verify employers’ compliance with program requirements.

IRCC is responsible for processing work permit applications and determining whether workers are eligible to come and work in Canada or not. While the TFWP is overseen by ESDC, IRCC is also responsible for overseeing the IMP. Thus, IRCC is responsible for determining the rules and conditions of the IMP and ensuring that employers comply with them. Therefore, similarly to ESDC, IRCC has the authority to inspect employers under certain conditions to verify employers’ compliance with program requirements. TFWs employed under the IMP who are experiencing abuse can use the same means as TFWs in the TFWP to report abuse and IRCC assesses and investigates these reports.

Provincial governments typically determine labour and employment standards which also apply to migrant workers.³⁷ These standards, for example, include “hours of work, working conditions and termination of employment”³⁸. In New Brunswick, employment standards are regulated by the Department of Post-Secondary Education, Training and Labour. In Nova Scotia, labour standards are regulated by the Department for Labour, Skills and Immigration. Finally, in PEI, employment standards are regulated by the Department for Economic Growth, Tourism and Culture.

If employees, including migrant workers, face workplace health and safety concerns, they would therefore report these concerns to their respective provincial or territorial workplace health and safety offices which are affiliated with departments at the respective provincial or territorial governments. Likewise, other employment problems such as unjust pay, unfair treatment or not respecting the employment agreement are to be reported at the provincial/territorial level at the provincial or territorial employment standards office.

³⁶ Employment and Social Development Canada.

³⁷ Note: There are some occupations that are federally regulated and these occupations therefore have to adhere to the rules set out in the Federal Labour Standards.

³⁸ Employment and Social Development Canada, “Hire a Temporary Worker through the Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program - Overview.”

The Rights of Temporary Foreign Workers

ESDC has published online an overview of the rights of TFWs, accessible in eight languages (English, French, Spanish, Mandarin, Hindi, Korean, Tagalog and Thai language). The overview includes information on what the employers of TFWs are obliged to do and what they are not allowed to do. According to this list, employers of TFWs must ³⁹:

- Provide workers with information about their rights;
- Provide workers with a signed copy of their employment agreement on or before the first day of work;
- Pay workers for their work as stated in their employment agreement, including overtime work of that is included as part of the agreement;
- Make reasonable effort to provide workers with a workplace free of abuse, including reprisals;
- Follow the employment and recruitment standards of the province or territory where workers are working;
- Get and pay for private health insurance that covers workers emergency medical care until workers are eligible for provincial or territorial health insurance coverage;
- Make reasonable efforts to give you access to health care services if workers are injured or become ill at the workplace.

In contrast to that, employers of TFWs cannot:

- Force workers to perform unsafe work or work that the workers' employment agreement does not authorize them to do;
- Force workers to work if they are sick or injured;
- Pressure or force workers to work overtime not included in their employment agreement;
- Punish workers for reporting mistreatment, unsafe work, inadequate housing or for cooperating with an inspection by a government employee;
- Take workers' passports or work permit away from them;
- Deport workers from Canada or change their immigration status;
- Make workers reimburse recruitment-related fees that employers may have paid to hire workers.

In addition to this list of things that employers of TFWs are obliged and prohibited to do, the overview also presents further explanations related to the employment agreement, access to health care services, what to do if workers become injured or ill at their workplaces, general health and safety at work, what a workplace free of abuse means, what to do if a worker loses their job, changing employers, and housing rights.

³⁹ Employment and Social Development Canada, "Temporary Foreign Workers: Your Rights Are Protected," policies, 2022, <https://www.canada.ca/en/employment-social-development/services/foreign-workers/protected-rights.html>.

Finally, ESDC's overview of the rights of TFWs also includes information on how migrant workers can receive help if they are facing abuse or maltreatment. Specifically, information is listed on how to report abuse to Service Canada, applying for an open work permit for vulnerable workers who are victims of abuse, which support organizations exist for migrant workers, how to report a workplace health or safety problem at the provincial or territorial workplace health and safety offices, how to report other employment problems to the provincial or territorial employment standards office, how to report issues for workers who are employed in federally regulated sectors, and where to seek help and/or report issues related to human trafficking.

In addition to this information, ESDC also has a side that provides TFWs with specific instructions on how to report abuse. This information is available in the same eight languages as the information on TFWs rights. Abuse can be reported online, via phone, in person or via mail. Online abuse report forms are available in the above-named eight languages. For the phone tip line that is run by Service Canada, it is indicated that callers can talk to "a live Service Canada agent in one of more than 200 languages" ⁴⁰.

IRCC has likewise published an overview of the rights of migrant workers who are in Canada through the IMP. As these rights as well the pathways to report abuse are fairly similar to the TFWP, they are not outlined in further detail here.

Employer Non-Compliance

IRCC publishes a list of any employers who have hired temporary foreign workers under the Temporary Foreign Worker Program or the International Mobility Program and who have been found to be in non-compliance with their responsibilities as an employer ⁴¹. For the TFWP, non-compliance is linked to not adhering to the conditions set out in the offer of employment to a temporary foreign workers, as well as the conditions set out in the LMIA decision letter, annexes to the letter and the Immigration and Refugee Protection Regulations \(IRPR\) ⁴². Employers who are found as being non-compliant, face either or both of the following penalties: 1. A monetary penalty, or 2. They are banned from hiring TFWs for a certain period of time ⁴³.

According to the "Employers who have been found non-compliant" list, there are five employers in New Brunswick, 18 employers in Nova Scotia, and one employer in PEI who have been found to be non-compliant ⁴⁴. While most of these incidents of non-compliance resulted in monetary penalties, there are two instances where employers in Nova Scotia received a 2-year-ban from hiring TFWs,

How Many Migrant Workers are there in the Maritimes?

Q2 How many migrant workers are there in the Maritimes, through the TFW program, now and over the past few years? In what geographic locations and industries do they work?

What data sources can be used to identify this on an ongoing basis?

There are a few sources of data which can help to identify the number of temporary foreign workers in the Maritimes. (Detail about these sources follows in the next section.) ESDC publishes details on the number of positive LMIAs it has issued; however not all of those decisions will necessarily result in a worker coming to the Maritimes. Therefore, data published by IRCC, which indicates the number of work permits issued, offers a more accurate representation of overall numbers of TFWs.

The following figure shows the annual number of TFWP work permit holders from 2015 to 2022, using IRCC data. It should be noted that the data for 2022 only includes up to September; therefore, it is likely that the final numbers for 2022 will be higher. For comparison purposes, the total number of LMIAs issued (according to ESDC data) is also shown.

In NS, the annual number of TFWP work permit holders has increased every year since 2015 (except for 2020). This has largely been driven by increases in TFWs in farming occupations.

In NB, the annual number of TFWP work permit holders has increased steeply since 2020, driven by increasing numbers of TFWs in seafood processing.

In PE, the annual number of TFWP work permit holders has been increasing since 2015, due both to increased TFWs in seafood processing and farming occupations.

Sources for Figures 1, 2 and 3:

Work permit data source: Monthly IRCC Updates on open.canada.ca

Farming includes occupations: 8431 - General farm workers, 8432 - Nursery and greenhouse workers, 8252 - Agricultural service contractors, farm supervisors and specialized livestock workers, and 8611 - Harvesting labourers

Seafood processing includes 9463 - Fish and seafood plant workers and 9618 - Labourers in fish and seafood processing

LMIA data source: ESDC on open.canada.ca

For more detail on the specific numbers of work permits issued by occupation (according to National Occupation Classification (NOC) code) in each Maritime province from 2015 through September 2022, see the data tables included in Appendix B.

Figure 4, below, brings together the data for each province, to show how the total number of TFW work permits compares from province to province. As can be seen, Nova Scotia had the largest number from 2015 through 2021. However, New Brunswick has exceeded Nova Scotia in terms of TFW work permits so far in 2022.

In 2022 (so far), NB has had the highest number of TFWP work permits issued, exceeding numbers in NS.

Geographic Mapping

The data from ESDC on the number of positive LMIA's it has issued also contains the addresses of the companies which received these positive LMIA's. Since these are the addresses of the companies themselves, it may be that the address of where a TFW is employed is different than that of the company's office; however, this represents the closest information on location of TFWP workers that is publicly available.

The data on the four most recent quarters that has been published (July 2021- June 2022) has been used to create an interactive map showing the locations of these positive LMIA's across the Maritime provinces.

The interactive version of this map can be accessed at:

The ‘stream’ under which these LMIA’s were issued is included for each point on the map. Figure 5 shows the number of positive LMIA’s by stream in each province. In NB and PE, there were more Low Wage stream approved LMIA’s, while in NS, there were more Primary Agriculture stream LMIA’s.

Countries of Citizenship of Migrant Workers in Agriculture

Statistics Canada has an additional data set on TFWs in the agriculture and agri-food sector and, therefore, some additional information is available on these workers. For example, this data indicates the countries of citizenship for these workers, which is shown in the following figures. The most recent year for which this data is available is 2021.

NS: In 2021, out of 1,541 Temporary Foreign Workers in the agricultural sector, 60% were from Jamaica, and 35% from Mexico.

Agriculture and Food Manufacturing Industries

Statistics Canada also provides data on the number of TFWs in agricultural industries, as well as food and beverage manufacturing. The most recent data available is for the year 2020. Despite the unusual circumstances of 2020, when the COVID-19 pandemic reduced the numbers of TFWs, the distribution of TFWs in agricultural industries is fairly similar to prior years.

Detail regarding the datasets which are available on TFWs in the Maritime provinces, where they can be accessed and what information they contain, is included in the following table.

The data provided in this report tracks TFW positions on Labour Market Impact Assessments only, not TFWs that are issued a work permit or who enter Canada. The decision to issue a work permit rests with Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC); therefore, not all positions approved result in a work permit or a TFW entering Canada. The data includes all positions on all positive LMIAs as issued, and therefore also includes any position that may have been subsequently cancelled by the employer.

This list excludes all personal names, such as employers of caregivers or business names that use or include personal names. For this reason, the list is not complete and does not reflect all employers who requested or received an LMIA.

LMIAs in support of Permanent Residence (PR) are also excluded from TFWP statistics reporting.

This is part of the Agriculture and Agri-Food Labour Statistics Program, an annual census of all salaried employees who have worked in the agriculture and food manufacturing sectors. Statistics Canada combines the information from this survey and from its Longitudinal Immigration Database (IMDB), the Business Register and the Agriculture Taxation Data Program to identify temporary foreign workers and sectors.

The following data tables are available:

Service Mapping

Q3 What services exist to help migrant workers and who offers them (including community organizations, advocacy or faith-based groups, municipalities, government departments, immigrant settlement organizations, etc.)?

- Roles of the federal and provincial governments

Overall, the research identified that most services for migrant workers are provided by community organizations and advocacy groups as well as SPOs. While community organizations and advocacy groups clearly identified that they are serving all migrant workers and often focus their work on those who are most vulnerable, i.e., migrant workers coming through the SAWP or the low-wage stream of the TFWP, obtaining information on which groups of migrant workers SPOs provide services to was a lot harder. Specifically, it was difficult to obtain information on whether the services of SPOs are also accessible to migrant workers entering the Maritimes through the SAWP or in other more seasonal industries such as seafood plants. Where we were able to obtain such information, it is included in the tables below.

It is also important to mention that while many SPOs actually do have services available to migrant workers, some indicated that they do not undertake any specific outreach activities to reach these populations, i.e., they would not turn migrant workers away if they come to seek their services but also did not undertake any specific efforts to reach them as they did not have the capacities and resources to do so. Others mentioned that while their services are open to all migrants (including PRs and TFWs) they “may limit the timeframe they spend with migrant workers compared to PRs”. Moreover, having to navigate requirements such as hitting targets and/or key performance indicators linked to federal and provincial funding meant that it could sometimes be challenging for SPOs, who often receive most of their funding from IRCC, to focus their work on serving migrant workers. Finally, several SPOs mentioned that they are not able to provide migrant workers with support when these face immigration challenges or workplace challenges which means that this work is currently exclusively undertaken by very few community and advocacy groups in the Maritime provinces.

Services Available to Migrant Workers in New Brunswick

Compared to the other two Maritime provinces, NB has a decent representation of SPOs across the province that provide service to newcomers including migrant workers. There are several SPOs who cover different rural areas of the province. According to interviewees, however, their work can be difficult as they often have limited staff and need to cover huge areas with their services. Currently there are only two organizations in NB that undertake active outreach to migrant workers, inform them about their rights and support them when they are facing immigration challenges or workplace challenges, namely the Filipino-Community of New Brunswick and Madhu Verma Migrant Justice Centre.

Services Available to Migrant Workers in Nova Scotia

The service landscape for migrant workers is much less established in NS in comparison to NB. The main immigrant-serving SPOs in NS are ISANS and the Immigration Program of the YMCA. Both ISANS and YMCA provide services throughout the province, with nine local YMCA service branches across the province. However, most of the services that these two SPOs offer are not accessible to migrant workers, except for ISANS' TFW Support Program which offers some language training options and provides information. No One Is Illegal – Halifax/Kiipuktuk is the only organization that provides outreach to migrant workers, undertakes advocacy tasks on behalf of migrant workers and provides emergency help as well as support with immigration matters and complaints among other.

Services Available to Migrant Workers in Prince Edward Island

PEI has several SPOs and community organizations that offer services to migrant workers. The biggest SPO on the island is Immigrant and Refugee Services Association PEI, located in Charlottetown, which serves newcomers including migrant workers throughout the province. Similar to the other two provinces, there is only one major community organization in PEI, namely the Cooper Institute, that is engaged in outreach to migrant workers and supports them when facing immigration and workplace challenges.

Funding Sources

Q4 Many Service Providing Organizations (SPOs) receive funding from government to provide services to clients. Which funding sources or programs include TFWs as eligible recipients of services?

While IRCC is the main funding source for SPOs in Canada, the funding provided by IRCC is predominantly restricted to providing services to newcomers to Canada who arrive as Permanent Residents (PRs). IRCC funding can also be used to serve Government Assisted Refugees, immigrants entering through special programs that put them on the pathway to PR such as the Atlantic Immigration Program (AIP)⁴⁵, as well as Ukrainian nationals who are currently arriving in Canada. Thus, IRCC funding does not enable most SPOs to provide services to the vast majority of migrant workers.

ESDC sometimes provides funding to serve migrant workers. For example, during the pandemic, ESDC funded a project called “Empowering Temporary Foreign Workers during COVID-19” which was led by Kairos in collaboration with several community partners across Ontario, NS, NB, and PEI.

Funding from provincial governments often, also allows SPOs and other community organizations to provide services to migrant workers particularly in NB and PEI. In NB this funding is provided by the Department of Post-Secondary Education, Training and Labour. In their 2021-22 Immigrant Settlement Support Funding Guidelines the Department clearly states that TFWs and their spouses are eligible clients for funding provided by the department and even underlines that “temporary foreign workers are valuable to the province and are potential provincial nominee applicants or future permanent residents”. In PEI the Department of Economic Growth, Tourism and Culture provides funding to some of the SPOs in the province that allows these organizations to also serve migrant workers. Nova Scotia seems to be an exception as the current settlement funding guidelines 2023-26 do not include migrant workers other than those who currently hold a work permit but are PR applicants or those who have entered NS through the AIP as eligible clients for receiving settlement services.

According to discussions held as part of this research, it was also found that some SPOs and community organizations receive funding through their municipal governments, e.g., the city in which they are located. Additionally, several organizations, and especially grassroots community organizations, highlighted that they are able to provide services to migrant workers with funds provided to them through foundations, donations and/or other fundraising efforts.

Below, an overview of funding sources for each of the organizations identified in the Maritimes as providing services to migrant workers is outlined, based on the information available on their websites. It should be noted, therefore, that this may not be a comprehensive list.

Migrant Workers' Awareness of Their Rights and Responsibilities

Q5 Are migrant workers aware of their rights and responsibilities?

- Is awareness being measured? If so, how?

Opinions regarding whether migrant workers are aware of their rights and responsibilities varied among different stakeholders participating in the ARAISA stakeholder event as well as the consultations undertaken. Some clearly identified that most migrant workers are not aware of their rights and that more efforts needed to be undertaken to educate them on their rights. Others indicated that often migrant workers are aware of their rights or at least know where to find information on their rights. However, these stakeholders underlined that while migrant workers often know about their rights, they are not able to enforce their rights and that there were not enough tools and supports for them to do so. Some participants also mentioned that while they thought migrant workers are generally aware of their rights, there is a lack of knowledge of migrant workers' rights among employers.

Regarding the question whether the awareness of migrant workers with regards to their rights is measured, the research clearly indicated that this was not the case.

Challenges and Gaps in Services to Temporary Foreign Workers

Q6 What are the challenges when providing information and services to migrant workers in Atlantic Canada?

Challenges: Identified at Stakeholder Meeting and Consultations with Migrant Serving Organizations

Throughout the activities conducted as part of the stakeholder meeting, participants identified several challenges that currently exist when providing information and services to migrant workers in the Atlantic Canada. Some of these are related to structural internal or external issues. Below these issues are identified and discussed in further detail:

Lack of Knowledge Among SPO Staff

It was identified that because the work of SPOs often focuses on PRs, refugees that are resettled by the Canadian Government, or specific immigration programs and streams such as the AIP or the current arrival of Ukrainian nationals through the Canada-Ukraine authorization for emergency travel measures, SPO staff often lacks knowledge and/or awareness around the services that are available to TFWs. Sometimes lack of knowledge on services and supports available to migrant workers is also the result of staff turnover, which at least one SPO identified as an issue. It was highlighted that SPO staff needs to receive consistent education/training on this topic to ensure that they are aware.

Need for Networking and Community Planning

While there currently exist some connections and networks between different migrant serving organizations in the Maritimes, participants underlined that these connections and networks could be strengthened. It was stated that there still often is a lack of understanding of what services other organizations provide and that organizations in different regions do not necessarily communicate with each other to coordinate their services. It was suggested that mapping out different services available in the different regions across the Maritime provinces would be helpful. Moreover, existing networks should be drawn upon and expanded to ensure that migrant workers receive the best services they can. These networks could not only include SPOs and migrant serving organizations but also municipalities as well as ethnocultural associations. Finally, those organizations with more experience or knowledge regarding the work with migrant workers should share their experiences to ensure other organizations can draw upon this knowledge. Specifically, for the “Better Together” project, one suggestion that arose was that the project should support a network approach, i.e., organizations that already have good relationships and connections with migrant workers in their respective province and/or region, should be responsible for outreach activities and function as a first point of contact for migrant workers. These organizations can then refer migrant workers to other organizations that deliver services and supports in the specific regions that migrant workers live in.

Lack of Funding Available to Provide Information and Services to Migrant Workers

One of the biggest challenges in providing information and services to migrant workers that was identified at the stakeholder meeting and during consultations was related to the availability of funding. Participants indicated that the funding they receive from IRCC does not allow them to provide services to migrant workers, with the exception of those who arrived through the AIP (and, thus, are on a pathway to PR), as well as Ukrainian nationals who are currently arriving in the Maritimes as a result of the conflict in Ukraine.

While most organizations receive some funding from provincial governments which allows them to provide services and supports to migrant workers, a few indicated that it was still challenging to serve migrant workers. For example, one participant stated that it was difficult to serve migrant workers because they have targets that the organization is expected to reach due to the funding they receive from IRCC. Specifically, the participant underlined that because IRCC funds the majority of this organization’s programming, and because the organization’s team has limited capacity, they often need to prioritize PRs, AIP applicants, refugees and Ukrainian nationals over other clients. However, at least one SPO indicated that while the majority of their funding was received from IRCC, they did provide most of their services to migrant workers. Another one mentioned that “it was a numbers game”, indicating that striking a balance between funding received and services offered to different groups of migrants was an ongoing issue that is being faced.

Finally, one participant at the stakeholder meeting indicated that one problem with the funding they actually do receive to serve migrant workers is that it is not sufficient to address the actual needs that migrant workers are having. Specifically, this participant pointed out that in their experience, migrant workers often come to Canada without sufficient financial resources. Therefore, their needs are much higher than what an SPO can address by providing settlement and employment services, for example.

Capacity Limits

Providing migrant workers with information and services was not only challenging due to the funding restraints identified above but also due to other capacity limits, e.g., related to the number of employees available to provide services and information. For example, one organization underlined that while they do not turn away migrant workers if they come to their organization and, in fact, will provide them with the full range of services offered, they do not have the resources to seek out migrant workers to offer services. Another participant stated that because their organization has to cover a large rural area and has only limited staff available it is challenging to provide appropriate services to everyone. Thus, lack of outreach activities presented a major challenge in reaching migrant workers and providing services to them. This also became clear as several SPOs mentioned that most of the migrant workers they serve only became aware of their services through word of mouth. Some participants mentioned that as part of the “Empowering Temporary Foreign Workers during COVID-19 project”, migrant workers arriving in the Maritime provinces often received an information package which included information about the different organizations and services available to them and this had helped some migrant workers in finding their way to SPOs and accessing their services. However, since the project stopped in the fall of 2022, this was no longer the case.

Business Hours of SPOs

Another challenge in providing information and services to migrant workers that was identified during the stakeholder meeting was that the opening hours of many SPOs does not correspond to the times in which migrant workers are free to seek out such services. Specifically, participants highlighted that migrant workers often have to work long hours at their jobs which makes it difficult to access the services that are provided by SPOs during regular business hours. Participant who were engaged with community organizations providing help and support to migrant workers reiterated this and shared that often their work requires them to be available for answering questions or helping migrant workers in the evenings or during weekends.

Communication and Language

Closely linked to the above, two other challenges in providing services to migrant workers that were identified during the stakeholder meeting and the interviews were related to communication challenges. This was, on the one hand, linked to the means of communication, e.g., SPOs predominantly using email, phone or in-person communication, while it was identified that migrant workers typically seem to rely on WhatsApp as their main form of communicating with each other and with the outside world. Additionally, language barriers also presented a challenge for some in providing services to migrant workers, especially to those who either don't speak or have limited English and/or French. Not being able to speak the mother tongue of migrant workers presents a major challenge for migrant serving organizations in these instances.

Geographical Location of Workers

A few participants underlined that it could be difficult to provide services to migrant workers because of the geographical location of where these workers are living and working. Often migrant workers, especially those working in seafood plants or agriculture, are located in more rural areas, where fewer services can be found. Reaching these areas can prove difficult for migrant serving organizations due to limited staff available to cover these rural areas. Likewise, it is difficult for migrant workers in these areas to access services as they often have to rely on their employers for transportation and don't have access to public transportation. Moreover, one participant, highlighted, that their organization was facing difficulties at times, when trying to reach certain migrant workers living on the grounds of the factory they are working at, to provide services or support, because these factories "were almost like fortresses" and employers did not have any interest in ensuring that their workers could receive information about their rights or services and supports.

Gaps

Q7 What gaps are there in terms of services currently being delivered and services needed? What are the opportunities to address those needs?

Gaps: Identified in the Stakeholder Survey

According to the survey that was conducted among stakeholders participating in the ARAISA stakeholder meeting in Moncton on November 21st and 22nd, 2022, the three main barriers in terms of services currently available for migrant workers were related to access to language classes (mentioned by seven respondents), access to health care services (mentioned by five respondents) and access to services in rural areas (mentioned by five respondents). Regarding the first, barriers in access to both English and French classes were mentioned. Moreover, it was specifically indicated that TFWs do not have access to LINC (Language Instruction for Newcomers to Canada) classes with the exception of Ukrainian nationals. Finally, one respondent also stated that migrant workers do not have access to literacy classes and support.

Regarding access to health care, two respondents clarified that obtaining a provincial health card and, thus, being able to access provincial health care services, can be challenging for some migrant workers, especially those entering Canada through seasonal programs, due to the limited length of their work permits.

Regarding gaps in services accessible to migrant workers residing in rural areas, it was indicated that a major challenge migrant workers face in rural areas is lack of access to public transportation. This means that they are often dependent on their employer for getting anywhere. Moreover, one respondent each stated that language testing is not available in rural areas and that migrant workers in rural areas do not have access to the full range of settlement and support services as many of these services can only be delivered virtually in these areas.

Additionally, other gaps in services currently available to migrant workers that were identified in the survey, related to access to childcare support and daycares (mentioned by three respondents) and not being able to access certain social benefits provided by the federal or provincial government such as provincial income assistance, child tax or daycare subsidy (mentioned by three respondents). Moreover, language barriers (e.g., lack of information, such as on workers' rights and services, on government websites available in other languages than English and French), access to appropriate housing, access to legal services and aid, support with applying for government benefits (e.g., parental benefits, pensions) or filing taxes, and information and support for navigating immigration pathways including applications for PRs were identified as gaps (each of them mentioned by two respondents).

Finally, some of the gaps mentioned less frequently (i.e., by one respondent each) are listed below:

- Access to settlement services;
- Ability to bring family with them⁴⁶;
- Whistle-blower process for migrants facing abuse;
- Community inclusion;
- Support for youth (e.g., Youth English Development and Youth Engagement);
- Labour rights issues; and,
- Bridge between newcomers and employers.

Gaps: Identified at Stakeholder Meeting and Consultations with Migrant Serving Organizations

The gaps identified from the data collection at the stakeholder meeting as well as through the consultations with migrant serving organizations are similar to those identified in the survey.

Language

Specifically, similar to the survey results, language was highlighted as a major barrier in regards to information and services available to migrant workers. On the one hand, this related to lack of access to English and French classes. It was indicated that getting access to language classes would be important for migrant workers to improve their language skills, which would ultimately empower them as it would allow them to better understand currently available information, to navigate bureaucratic processes and to enforce their rights as this is often linked with having to fill out long and complicated application forms, among other things.

⁴⁶ Note: On December 2nd, 2022 Canada's Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship announced that starting in January 2023, Canada is expanding eligibility of migrant workers to bring their immediate families over to Canada. While currently this is only an option for migrant workers in high-skilled positions, eligibility characteristics will be expanded in a phased approach under this new temporary (i.e., 2-year) measure. For more information see: <https://www.canada.ca/en/immigration-refugees-citizenship/news/2022/12/employers-and-temporary-workers-to-benefit-from-family-work-permits-to-address-labour-shortages.html>.

On the other hand, the issue of language refers to the accessibility of information for migrant workers (e.g., on their rights, on labour laws, the health care system etc.). It was highlighted that while quite a number of resources and information are available to migrant workers, this information is often (though not exclusively)⁴⁷ available in English and French only which makes it difficult to access it for those migrant workers who are not proficient in either of the two languages. Moreover, even if migrant workers have good English and/or French language skills, participants underlined that it was still hard to comprehend the information because of the way it is written. Thus, it was suggested that there is not only a need to provide information in more languages but also to provide this information in a more comprehensible way, e.g., in plain/simple language.

Access to Open Work Permits and PR

It was voiced that closed work permits and the resulting dependency on employers was a big issue as it makes it very difficult for migrant workers to leave an abusive relationship with their employer due to fear of deportation or not being able to return to Canada in the future. This dependency on employers makes it difficult for migrant workers to enforce their rights.

Moreover, several participants and interviewees also identified that there are only very limited pathways to receive PR for most migrant workers. Access to PR was easier to obtain for highly skilled or higher skilled TFWs, with lower skilled individuals facing major barriers and seasonal workers being pretty much completely excluded from this option. However, access to PR was seen as important for all migrant workers because, on the one hand, PR means that migrant workers have security and do not have to fear not being able to return to Canada, and, on the other hand, it provides them with important rights that they otherwise cannot access.

Helping Migrant Workers to Enforce Their Rights

There was consensus that another major gap in the services provided to migrant workers is centered around helping them to enforce their rights. Several participants, including a former TFW, for example, emphasized that while there is quite a bit of information available to migrant workers that explains their rights, and, in their opinion, migrant workers are often relatively well informed about these rights, they are not provided with the means and support to enforce these rights. Particularly, it was voiced that the long and complicated forms for filing a complaint or applying for a vulnerable worker open work permit, language barriers in filling out such paperwork and/or calling the tip line presented a major hinderance to migrant workers to pursue such steps. Moreover, due to the power imbalances between migrant workers and their employers, migrant workers are often fearful of filing complaints as they fear repercussions such as losing their position, not being able to return to Canada on a different contract, not being able to obtain their PR status⁴⁸ or even physical harm. It was voiced by some that while providing migrant workers with information on their rights was important, this would not be doing anything to address the underlying structural issues and systemic barriers that migrant workers are facing. As pointed out by one participant: “Providing migrant workers with their rights is great, but then what? How do we support them to exercise their rights? That is a major gap and needs to be addressed.”

⁴⁷ For an exception see information on the rights of temporary foreign workers which is available in eight languages.

⁴⁸ Note: This applies to migrant workers who are eligible to apply for PR, predominantly.

Access to Health Care

Several participants emphasized that access to health care is a major gap in services currently available to migrant workers, especially for those who are in Canada on a more seasonal basis. It was mentioned that in order to be able get access to provincial health care migrant workers have to stay in the province for a certain amount of time before being eligible. However, according to these participants, employers would often provide workers with a contract that is just a few days short of being able to access free health care. While employers must provide workers with insurance coverage until the workers qualify for provincial health care, this coverage often predominantly focuses on accident insurance and does not cover other health care services that are accessible under the provincial health coverage. Access to free health care was also one of the top five priorities that was identified as part of a survey that No one is illegal – Halifax/Kjipuktuk conducted among over 100 migrant workers in NS in 2021.

Access to Employment Insurance

In addition to the lack of access to health care, a few participants also mentioned that many migrant workers do not have access to employment insurance (EI) when residing in Canada. Specifically, it was stated that some workers who are working in Canada seasonally decide to stay in Canada because of fear or not being able to return and work here again during the next season. However, during the time they are off work, predominantly in the winter months, they do not have access to any supports or services, such as EI to help them cover that period.

Access to Legal Aid

Lack of access to legal aid was identified as another gap in services to migrant workers. This was both related to receiving and navigating accurate advice and information for immigration matters as well as advice and help with other matters, e.g., when migrant workers get charged with offences. Not being able to access and afford legal services puts migrant workers in a vulnerable position. Some organizations are able to connect migrant workers in situations of need with lawyers who provide pro bono work, but this is not the case everywhere.

Access to Emergency Housing and Food

It was identified that access to emergency housing and food was another gap in the services available to migrant workers. Especially for migrant workers experiencing abusive situations and who need protection immediately, access to emergency housing and food would be essential but is currently lacking.

Lack of Continuity of Services

Several participants highlighted that continuity in providing services and resources was an important factor that is currently lacking and needs to be addressed. For example, it was highlighted that simply presenting information on rights and services to migrant workers on a one-time basis is not enough. Instead there needs to be follow-up opportunities and continuous outreach so that migrant workers can develop a trustful relationship and understand that organizations are there to help and support them. Often, however, there is a lack of resources for this kind of continuous outreach.

Housing Inspections

For workers entering under the SAWP, employers are responsible for providing accommodation to them. While housing has to be inspected prior to the arrival of migrant workers, a few participants underlined that standards for housing are often not met and that migrant workers face precarious situations due to the lack of appropriate housing accessible to them.

Engagement with Employers

While opinions around the question of engaging employers to improve access to information and services to migrant workers were disputed, several participants did highlight that the lack of engagement with the employers of TFWs presented a gap that needs to be addressed. These participants underlined that employers often lack knowledge on the rights of migrant workers as well as their responsibilities as employers to migrant workers. However, several participants, and particularly those working directly and exclusively with migrant workers, were highly critical of the idea of engaging employers because they felt it would break the trust that migrant workers have developed in their organizations.

Promising Practices and Opportunities

Q8 Are there promising practices or case studies of effective service delivery to migrant workers?

Results from Data Collection at Stakeholder Meeting and Consultations with Migrant Serving Organizations

Meet Migrant Workers Where They Are, on Their Turf, and in Their Terms

Several participants at the stakeholder meeting and during the consultations raised that migrant workers, and especially those who are working in lower-skilled positions in fish plants or the agricultural field, often are working long hours, sometimes even on weekends, and have little time off. The little time, these workers do have off, they often want to rest or spend on activities they enjoy. Therefore, it was difficult to reach migrant workers at time and to provide them with information on their rights as well as information on which services and supports are available to them. A few participants therefore highlighted the importance of meeting migrant workers where they are, on their turf and in their terms. For example, it was suggested to incorporate outreach activities and information sessions with other activities that migrant workers might participate in, e.g., basketball or other sport games. Another suggestion was to arrange gatherings where food is provided and people can interact and use these gatherings as a way to also share information about migrant workers' rights and the services or supports that are available to them. A third suggestion included incorporating information or other outreach session with social activities such as canoeing trips that some SPOs organize. Moreover, a few participants and interviewees stated that not only the location of where services and information are provided was important but that migrant serving organizations also need to consider the means of communication they use. Specifically, it was highlighted that migrant workers often use WhatsApp as their main means of communication. Therefore, using WhatsApp would be an important tool for anyone who wants to ensure that migrant workers can reach their organizations.

Outreach, Continuity of Services and Relationship Building with Migrant Workers

Specifically, interviewees from the community organizations that are already heavily involved in providing help and support to migrant workers, emphasized the importance of engaging in continuous outreach and relationship building with migrant workers. These interviewees highlighted that it was important to first of all build up trust with the migrant workers. Showing up continuously, interacting with migrant workers and demonstrating that an organization is there to support them and not just there once, were important factors that were mentioned in this regard. This ensured that migrant workers were comfortable approaching the organization for help and trusting them in often dire situations. Participants from these community organizations also made it clear that for the work they are doing they cannot have any relationships with employers as this would result in the workers not trusting them.

Outreach to Community and Creating Community Connections and Relationships

An important factor for ensuring better services to migrant workers that was identified by a few participants related to outreach activities in the community that migrant workers are living in and creating community connections. This was seen as particularly important in rural areas, but also elsewhere. Having the support from other community members and making them understand the important contributions that migrant workers make to these communities can generally create more support and/or assistance for providing services. For example, if SPOs aren't able to provide certain services due to capacity limits, they might be able to refer migrant workers to other individuals or organizations in the community who can help them out instead. One interviewee provided the example of sometimes reaching out to local churches when additional help and support is needed. Community outreach might also result in opportunities to connect migrant workers with locals to foster connections and inclusion. It was highlighted that building a social network and having connections with community members can make a significant difference for migrant workers and community members. Moreover, connections to cultural groups/organizations that already exist within communities were seen as important collaboration partners. Not only are these groups/organizations familiar with the culture, traditions and way-of-thinking that are typical for people coming from a specific country or region but also, they are able to speak the native language and can thus help with translation and interpretation which is crucial.

Guides to Help Migrant Workers Navigate Important Information

The Cooper Institute in PEI has developed guides with information for migrant workers in the low-wage and the SAWP streams to help them understand the law and their rights as well as providing them with information on resources and services available to them. These guides are available in English, Spanish and simplified Chinese and present a great resource that provides information in an accessible way.

Increasing Knowledge Exchange and Sharing Best Practices

A few participants underlined that in order to serve migrant workers better, it would be helpful to increase the knowledge exchange between SPOs working with migrant workers so that they can learn from each other and share best practices (e.g., what works and what doesn't work). Specifically, because some organizations have more experience working with migrant workers, drawing on their expertise would be valuable.

Collaboration Between All Levels of Stakeholders

Closely linked to the above, one participant from an SPO in NB highlighted that at least in their region and in their experience, something that is working well is the collaboration between all levels of stakeholders including the SPOs, municipal and provincial governments, IRCC and even a Minister of Parliament's office. Specifically, this participant highlighted that through this collaboration and the existing good contacts with individuals at all of these levels, they had been able to find quick and successful solutions to problems faced by migrant workers.

Consulting Migrant Workers

Finally, one interviewee underlined the importance of consulting migrant workers to better understand their needs and learn from them what services and supports they want to have access to or what information they require or want to learn more about. Involving migrant workers in the work undertaken contributes to making them partners not merely passive receivers. Involving them and hearing their perspectives and what they need is therefore crucial in any work undertaken to help and support migrant workers.

Conclusion and Recommendations

Overall, while the numbers of migrant workers have consistently increased in all three Maritime provinces over the past few years, there are limited services and supports available to them. This is particularly true for those migrant workers who are the most vulnerable, namely those entering the Maritimes through the low-wage stream and the SAWP.

Based on the results of the mapping and gap analysis, the following are some recommendations on how to improve information and services to migrant workers:

1. Language and Communication

- e) Deliver services and provide information in more languages, including the native languages of the largest groups of migrant workers arriving in the Maritimes.

- f) When information can only be provided in English or French, make sure it is accessible in plain and comprehensive language.
- g) Use communication technology that is used by migrant workers, e.g., WhatsApp.
- h) Ensure that services and supports are accessible to migrant workers at times when they can access them, e.g., evenings and weekends after their regular work is over.

2. Outreach, Continuity and Meeting Migrants Where they Are, on their Turf and in Their Terms

- d) Engage in outreach activities to ensure migrant workers irrespective of their locations know about their rights and services available to them.
- e) Ensure that there is continuity in engagement with and services provided to migrant workers.
- f) Engage migrants and provide information and services to them at times and in locations that are convenient to them, e.g., integrate them in activities that migrant workers already participate in or enjoy doing.

3. Increase Networking and Collaboration

- d) Draw on existing networks and experiences of organizations that already provide services and support to migrant workers.
- e) Enable networking and sharing of best practices among SPOs and other migrant serving organizations, e.g., through creating a community of practice.
- f) Increase collaboration between different types of stakeholders (e.g., SPOs, community organizations, municipal and provincial government and IRCC).

4. Help Migrant Workers Enforce their Rights

- d) Establish more services that help migrant workers to navigate bureaucratic and administrative processes, including but not limited to process of applying for government funding and benefits, doing taxes etc.
- e) Establish more services that help migrant workers enforce their rights, including but not limited to, helping them to file complaints about violations of their rights, applying for open work permit for vulnerable foreign workers.
- f) Establish more services that provide emergency housing and support for migrant workers escaping abusive employment and housing conditions.
